

BELASCO AS STAR IN ONE-ACT FARCE; ONE ACT ENOUGH

With Julie Opp and Elsie Oldham as Support, "Elevator Button" Fails.

CRITIC FINDS IT SLOW.

They Just Stand Still for Two Hours and Twenty Minutes and Make Noise.

"BUTTER, BUTTER, WHO WISHED THE BUTTER?" A one-act comedy of Broadway life. CHARACTERS.

David Belasco, a producer of plays. Julie Opp, an actress. Elsie Oldham, ditto. Edwin Arden, actor, and Mrs. Arden. John Davies, a very dramatic critic. William Elliott, son-in-law of David Belasco. Mr. Howard, secretary to Mr. Belasco. A watchman. Two electricians.

Scene: An elevator plying between the Belasco studios in the Belasco Theatre and Broadway. Time—Sunday afternoon.

Julie Opp (examining a row of buttons by which the elevator is operated): I wish I had an elevator like this. It would be such a nice plaything for the children.

David Belasco: The very thing. See what fun they could have. (Business of Mr. Belasco punching a button. The elevator stops with a bump. Business of all passengers being bumped. Business of the women squealing.)

David Belasco: You can't get the door open unless the car stops right at a floor.

(Business of Mr. Belasco trying to open door, although car is a foot from the floor. Business of the door sticking very tight. Business of Mr. Belasco pressing buttons. Business of the elevator standing very still.)

Mr. Belasco (shouting): Hi, there, watchman!

(The watchman appears outside the great door of the elevator.)

Mr. Belasco: Get us out.

(Very business-like business of strong-arm watchman trying to shove door open. Business of the door grating its teeth, sticking its toes tight and refusing to budge.)

Mr. Belasco: Call Mr. Elliott and Mr. Howard.

(Those two appear. The door opens at them and won't yield to their turning.)

Mr. Belasco: Call electricians.

(Two electricians appear. Business of electricians monkeying with wires and fuses. Business of the elevator standing very still and the door holding fast.)

An Electrician: Well, we'll have to shove 'er up with crowbars.

(Business of both electricians shoving the elevator from the bottom with crowbars. The elevator is raised to the floor level. Business of the door opening as pleasantly as you please. The passengers step out.)

Julie Opp: I don't think I will get one of these elevators for the children.

Mr. Belasco: No, I wouldn't.

(CURTAIN.)

(Time required for this performance, two hours and twenty minutes. Properties required, six philosophical dispositions.)
